

5 PRO TIPS

IN CARING FOR YOUR BATTING GLOVE

BATTING GLOVE CARE depends largely on your utilization, game/practice conditions, moisture (sweat/humidity), and a number of other factors. Whatever the case, our MLB pros have long stood by a number of care tips that have worked for them:

1

CLEAN AFTER EACH USE

It's much easier to maintain longevity of your gloves if you're caring for them after each practice / game rather than waiting until you see wear-spots or deterioration. At that point, it might just be too late, so care early and often

A DRY LEATHER BRUSH IS YOUR NEW BEST FRIEND

Dry leather cleaning brushes are one of the easiest ways to care for your gloves. Simply take the tool and gently brush off any excess soil that couldn't be removed at the field. Be careful not to scrub too hard – you don't want to feel like you're "scraping" it in any way

AVOID HARSH CHEMICALS / SOAPS

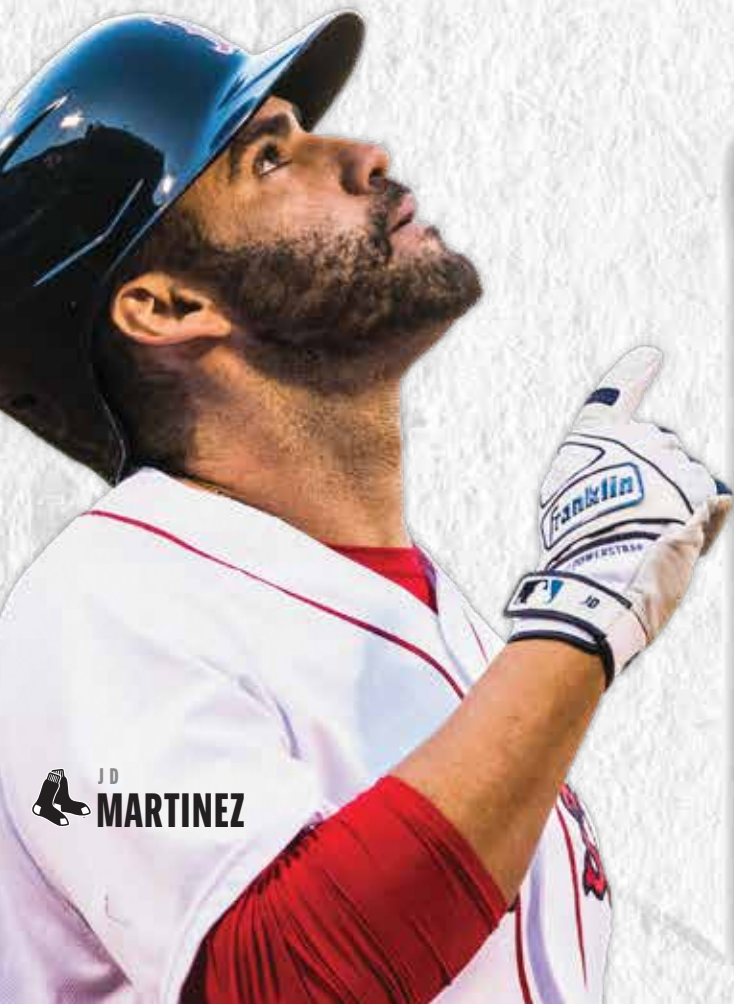

These will tend to strip away all of the natural oils in leather that make the gloves supple and soft. If you really need to clean the gloves, then opt instead to spot-clean with a tiny bit of soap and water on a rag or cloth, but remember NEVER to fully saturate the gloves if you can avoid it

TO CONDITION OR NOT TO CONDITION?

Again, the natural oils in leather are what you want to preserve the best you can. The longer these remain untaunted, the longer your gloves will hold up. If your gloves are really in need of restoration, we'd recommend grabbing a very simple leather conditioner (the fewer the ingredients usually the better!), apply with a small sponge onto blemished areas, allow it to dry naturally, and then buff off when dry. We recommend testing in a discreet area first

NATURAL AERATION IS KEY

For so many reasons. Stuffing sweaty damp gloves in the bottom of your equipment bag will cause bacteria growth, leading to foul odors, and denatured leather that loses so many of the extraordinary natural properties it possesses. We recommend either hooking your batting gloves onto the side of your equipment bag or attaching them to our proprietary GLOVE AERATORS with built-in odor-relieving and moisture-absorption pods that help extend lifespan of the gloves
